U

U, u, originally V, v. When long, it corresponds to the Greek ov and our oo (as to sound), but when short, it had an indistinct sound between the French u or German u and our u and short i; hence, it was sometimes the representative of the Greek v, as in fuga (φυγή); sometimes it was changed into i, as optimus for optamus. As an abbreviation V. (if = u) stands for uti; V. V. for uti vocerant.

V

V. v. Originally written with the sign of the vowel u, but considered even by the ancients as essentially different from that vowel. On account of this relationship v was frequently changed into u; e. g. solco, solutum; silva, silva. As an intermediate sound between two vowels v was in many cases suppressed; e. g. amasti for amavisti. In ancient manuscripts, we find also a purely orthographical omission of the v; e. g. serus for servus, etc. As an abbreviation, V. signifies vir, rivus, etc.; V. C. or VC., vir clarissimus; VCP., voto compos ponit; V. V. virgo Vestalis. As the sign of a numeral (5). V. is not properly an abbreviation, but the sign of the open hand (with allusion to the five fingers).

OF THE AS.

The Romans used this word (As) to denote, I. The copper coin, value (in the time of Cicero) about one cent and a half of our money. II. The unit of weight (libra), or of measure (jugerum). III. Any unit or integer, considered as divisible; as, of inheritances, interest, houses, etc., whence, ex asse heres, one who inherits the whole. (See this word in the Dictionary).—The multiples of the As are, Dupondius (duo pondo; for the As originally weighed a pound), s. a. 2 Asses: Sestertius (sesqui tertius), s. a. 2½ Asses: Treasiss, s. a. 3 Asses: Quatrussis, s. a. 4 Asses: and so on to Centussis, s. a. 100 Asses.—The As, whatever unit it represented, was divided into twelve parts or uncias, and the different fractions received different names, as follows:—

	Uncia.		Uncia.
As	. 12	Triens	. 4
Deunx	. 11	Quadrans, or Terun-	. 3
Dextans	. 10	cus	. 3
Dodrans	. 9	Sextans	. 2
Bee	. 8	Uncia	. 1
Sextunx	. 7
Semis	. 6	Sesuncia	. ½
Quincunx	. 5

The Uncia was divided in the following manner:—

1 Uncia contained 2 Semiuncias.
" 3 Duella.
" 4 Stollia.
" 6 Sextula.
" 24 Scrupula (Scriptula, or Scri-
" 48 Oboli.

TABLES OF VALUE, WEIGHT, AND MEASURE.

ROMAN COINS.

These were the Teruncius, Sumbella, and As, or Libella, of copper; the Sestertius, Quinarus or Victoriatius, Denarius, of silver; and the Aureus, of gold.

Millies centies H. S.	4,290,000	0	0

N. B. The marks denoting a Sestertius nummus are HS. LLS. HS.; which are properly abbreviations for 2 1/2 asses.—Observe also, that when a line is placed over the numbers centies millia is understood, as in the case of the numeral adverbs; thus HS. MC. is millies centies HS.; whereas HS. MC. is only 1,100 Sestertii.—The Roman Pondo Argenti is computed at a little more than $14.52 of our money.

ENGLISH-LATIN

DICTIONARY:

TO ACCOMPANY

BULLIONS'S

LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

NEW YORK:

SHELDON AND COMPANY.

PREFACE.

THE present part of the Dictionary is adapted from the English-Latin Dictionary of Dr. Kaltschmidt. The prosody is not marked, except in a few cases, where it is necessary to indicate the conjugation to which a verb belongs; nor is information given as to the gender and declension of nouns and the conjugation of verbs — the compiler having, according to the usual practice, confined himself to giving simply the Latin equivalents to the English words and expressions. By this means considerable space has been saved, and the student is not subjected to much inconvenience; for as soon as he has found the word or phrase required, he can turn to the first part of the Dictionary, where he will find the necessary information upon all the points above mentioned. For etymological information, the student is likewise referred to the Latin-English part.

It is perhaps scarcely necessary to observe, that in an English-Latin Dictionary there necessarily occur a great many words for which there are no equivalents in classical Latinity. In these cases such words and forms are given as have been commonly employed by modern Latinists, and they are distinguished from the genuine classical words by having a † prefixed to them.

is answered to by several Latin prepositions: for a while, ad quoddam tempus; for other matters, de ceteris rebus; it is not for nothing, non hoc de nillo est; to translate word for word, verbum de verbo expressum proferre; it is for our profit, ex usu est nostro; for grief, ex agritudine; they are kept for a double service, habentur in duplici ministerium; for the remaining time, in reliquum tempus; for ever, in omne tempus; for a perpetual remembrance, in memoriam sempiternam; for time to come, in posterum; to be punished for a crime, ob delictum pœnas dare; I am paid for my folly, ob stultitiam pretium fero; for so many ages, per tot secula; you may for me, per me licet; for anger, præ ira; for fear, præ metu or propter metum; for joy, præ gaudio; to take for granted, pro concessio numere; to hold for done, pro facto habere; to believe for true, pro certo credere; he spoke for car-side, secundum nostram causam disputavit; it is sometimes expressed by the ablat. or genit. case — as, for fear of being yielded up, metu conditionis;
he dies for love, amore perit; for how much, quanti; for so much, tanti; for more, pluris; for less, minoris; for how muchsoever, quantumque;
for an as, asse; after good, fit, lausful, profitable, &c., it is expressed by the dative case — as, it is a shame for you, turpe est tibi; for, for the sake of, causa, gratia, ergo, per, pro, propter; as for example, exempli causa or gratia; for this reason, eâ gratia; virtue is to be desired for its own sake, virtus propter se expetenda est; for all (although),
et al, quanquam, etiam, cumvis; for all this, or for all that, nihilo minus, nihilo secus, tamen; for all the philosophers say, quicquid dicant philosophi;
for (as for), quod attinet ad; for nothing, gratis;
impune; for that, or for as much as, cum, propter ea quod; si quidem, quandoquidem, quoniam; for the most part, fere, maximam partem, plerumque;
for some time, aliquamdiu, aliquantisper; for what cause? quare? qua de causa? for which cause, quan-obrem, quare; for that cause, ideo, eo, propterea, eâ gratia, ideoque; for ever and ever, in secula, in æternum, in omne ævum; he was a good orator for those times, multum, ut temporibus illis, valuit di-cendo; I know for certain, mihi est exploratum; for aught I see, quantum ego perspicio; I for my part, ego quidem. For is frequently included in the verb — as, to look for, expectare;
to wait for, opperiri; to be for one, cum aliquo stare.
